Trafficking in human beings is not prostitution.

Trafficking is the movement of persons against their will – especially women and minors – from their place of origin to another place for work or sex exploitation.

Trafficking is concealed in factories and in fields, as forced labour without fundamental rights.

Trafficking is concealed in homes, where women who are employed to do housework and caretaking are subjected to harassment, blackmail, forced marriages.

Trafficking is concealed in streets, where victims are forced to sell their bodies.

It is for these reasons that trafficking in human beings is a profound violation of human rights.
